THE CITY OF BROOKLYN NON-SUITED. In the Kings County Supreme Court, yesterday, before Judge Tappan, an action was brought by the City of Brooklyn against the Brooklyn City Railroad Company, for damages. The suit was brought to re-cover $11,600 on a judgment obtained by Ferdinand Meyer for physical injuries sustained by being thrown from a wagon by running into a hole in the pavement between the railroad tracks of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company, in the year 1857, the Railroad Company having executed a bond to keep the pavement in repair between the rails and three feet each side thereof. Witnesses were called, and the nature of the accident proved. A motion was made by the defendants to dismiss the suit on the ground that the Railroad Company was bound to keep the street in repair under the direction of such competent authority as the city should designate; that the Common Council had never designated any such because the city. as the city should designate; that the Common Council had never designated any such person to supervise the work, and that therefore the Company was not bound to repair the street. The motion was argued by Mr. Alex. McCue for the City, and Messrs, G. T. Jenks and H. C. Murphy for the Railroad Company. The Court granted of which they have a fine assertment suitable for Holiday Giffs. No. 777 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK, cates of temperance. Indeed, public sentiment is unanimous on this point, although there may be differences of opinion as to the best method of accomplishing the desired end. Temperance means moderation, though technically applied to abstinence from the use of intoxicating fluids; it has a much broader signification than that. The individual who abjures all distilled and fermented stimulants as a deadly poison may, nevertheless, be intemperate in his language, in his pursuits of wealth, in his eating, in his political opinions, in the gratification of any one of his passions, his prejudices, or his appetites. It is even possible to preach "temperance" intemperately.

There are certain enthusiasts, for example, who demand the entire abolishment of alcoholic stimulants. Against these ultra-prohibitionists the great body of the medical profession takes decided ground. Nine-tenths of the physicians and surgeons of the civilized world prescribe alcohol, and medicines of which alcohol is a cardinal ingredient, in their practiee. They say it is one of the most important articles in the materia medica, and that nothing can supply its place. Sometimes they administer it neat, sometimes diluted with water. sometimes medicated; and while admitting, as any sane and honest man admits, that it is morally und physically a poison when taken to excess, they argue that under certain conditions, and in certain cases, its use is not only advisable, but essential to the preservation of life and the restoration of Health.

Believing that the most profound pathologists of the age understand the matter somewhat better than non-professionals, we accept the doctrine and practice as philosophic and correct-the more especially as the result of their treatment confirms their theories.

The rational friends of temperance, side by side with whom we stand, frankly concede that alcohol is sometimes necessary as a sanitary agent. Mr. Greeley grants this in a recent article published in The Independent, and only fanatics, whose zeal is untempered by knowledge, attempt to deny it.

Here, however, a difficulty occurs. The liquors of commerce are so generally adulterated that it is perilous to give them to sick persons. All the brandies, rums, gins, whiskies, &c., are more or less impoisoned. Each contains some ingredients which provoke a thirst, for ardent spirits-and thus drunkards are made. Under these circumstances, sensible temperance men should be the first to appreciate the importance of a pure stimulant for medical use.

This desideratum is supplied to the public and faculty in the form of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is not merely a wholesome stimulant, but an invalqable tonic, corrective, and alterative. In manufacturing, advertising, and selling it-for sanitary purposes onlythe proprietors claim to be contributing a sound and substantial plank to the temperance platform. There is a good deal of cant talked and written by some of the self-elected reformers of the morals of mankind. It is the misfortune of many of these persons, and of their disciples, to confound the use of diffusible stimulants as an antidote with their misuse as a beverage. The spirit by which they are animated is a spirit of blind bigotry and intolerance, akin to that which, in the olden time, led to the massacre of St. Bartholomew, the crusade against the Albigenses, and many other foul wrongs committed in the name of religion. Thomas Hood, the wittiest of philosophers, and the most philosophical of wits, characterized the narrow-minded and aggressive piety which is continually pecking at whatever does not strictly conform to its peculiar ritual as magpiety, and there are a good many birds of the magpie feather, who would fain obtain the exclusive control of the whole temperance flock.

The doctrine of these individuals lacks consistency. The same arguments-if they deserve the name-which they argue against the employment of alcohol and alcoholic tonics in the treatment of disease, or for its prevention, apply with still greater force to most of the favorite specifics of the faculty. Yet they have not a word to say against opium, mercury. strychnine, iodine, quinine, and other deadly poisons which are prescribed daily by thousands of medical men. Are these less deleterious than the pure alcoholic stimulant used as a medium for diffusing the healing influence of wholesome herbs and roots through the system? The most uncompromising ultra-prohibitionist must admit that they are not."

But he has a rejoinder in reserve. The powerful medicaments referred to are prescribed in limited doses. Bounds are affixed to their use by those who recommend them. And is it not the same, we ask, with regard to medicated spirituous stimulants! Every bottle of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, for example, is accompanied by directions for its use. These directions are as clear and as explicit as those in a physician's prescription, and even if they happen to be violated, through inadvertence, no serious consequences ensue. A double or triple dose of laudanum, or of strychnine, or of mineral salt, may kill, and very often does kill; but a five-fold or even ten-fold dose of the Bitters would produce no such terrible effect. Opium is an infinitely stronger intoxicant than any variety of alcohol, and is extensively used to produce intoxication, as well as in medical treatment. Why, then, is opium recognized as a useful curative by the same parties that utterly prescribe all alcoholic preparations? It is always best to be con-Bigoted prohibitionists would do well to learn a few lessons from Sacred History. The patriarchs and prophets of the old dispensation, and the apostles of the new, were not oneidea men. They did not hold that the abuse of the thing was an argument against its use. The cultivation of the vine as a material for the manufacture of wine is sanctioned by the Scriptures. It is commanded to be given to him that is ready to perish, and also to "those that are of heavy hearts." Bad wine, and wine taken in excess, is made the type of Heaven's wrath, as the "wine of astonishment," of "rapine," of "fury," of "affliction," &c.; but good wine is not only prescribed, but is forcibly recommended, in many pages of the Bible. Some commentators insist that the article thus recognized by Divine authority contained no alcohol-that it was unfermented juice of the grape; but as it is called "strong drink" in Proverbs and elsewhere, and is expressly stated to be "gladdening," this construction is evidently contrary to the text. The true friends of Temperance resort to no such sophistry as this. They admit that a diffusive stimulant is a good thing when judiciously applied, and this, and nothing more than this, is the argument of the truly temperate. Prepared and sold by HOSTETTER & SMITH,
